

ANOLES OF FLORIDA

The Green Anole (Anolis carolinensis) has a green body, a white belly, and a pink dewlap (the big fan under its chin). They are native to Florida, and mostly live in the tops of trees. They are sometimes called the American Chameleon because they can quickly change colors from green to brown.

The Brown Anole (Anolis sagrei) has a brown body, a light brown stripe down the middle of its back, and dark brown triangles beside the stripe. Their dewlap is orange in the middle and yellow at the edge. They are an invasive species in Florida, and live in the leaf litter on the ground. They are sometimes called the Cuban anole or the Bahamian anole because they are native to those islands.
